DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 7 and 8 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Ogawa et al (JP 06-262207) in view of McCarthy '263. Ogawa discloses an apparatus and method containing most of the claimed elements including split backup rolls (3, 4) split into at least three segments in an axial direction (paragraph 0008 and 0009 of translation) and having a construction for supporting both a vertical load and a rolling direction load (see figures 1 and 3), each of the load measuring devices independently having a load measuring devices (16A, 16B, 17A and 17B), a coiling device (12) and work rolls (1, 2) supported by respective backup rolls (3,4 and 5). In paragraph 0019 Ogawa teaches the use of a control device to adjust the roll gap by controlling screw down devices for the backup rolls.

McCarthy is relied upon to teach that the methodology of calculating a difference between rolling direction forces acting on the backup rollers at their respective sides in order to bring the difference to a zero value (col. 1, lines 49-59) is well known in the art for controlling quality in the rolled strip. McCarthy further teaches use of a calculating device (50, 44, 52, 86) for calculating the force difference, a calculating device for calculating a control quantity (36) and a control device for controlling the roll gap (34). Therefore it would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art, at the time of applicants invention to have incorporated the control methodology and associated controllers of McCarthy with the stand/mill of Ogawa for the purpose of producing a quality product with little or no cambers since both references are concerned with the same problem and the combination would have yielded predictable results.

Response to Arguments

Applicant's arguments with respect to claims 7 and 8 have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.
